Plaza Suite at MPC Morgan Stock Stage

Neil Simon is like the Steven Spielberg of the stage: His plays (Biloxi Blues, The Odd Couple) are mostly traditional, well-crafted comedies that clean up at the box office. Plaza Suite, in three acts, pokes fun at relationships from all sides. The first act involves a couple with a strained marriage on their hands who try to rekindle the flame in their original honeymoon suite. In the second act a smooth-talking movie producer tries to seduce his old squeeze. In the third act, a bride-to-be gets cold feet before her wedding. First staged in 1968, Simon's sharp eye and comedic ear keeps the insights true and the slapstick ticklish. Director Peter DeBono and MPC's Theatre Department should have a romp with this one. [WR]
